

Natasa is a professor open to new ideas, always ready to experience and discover something new. She enjoys motherhood, her profession, her students, new challenges and every open-minded living being. She doesn't like limits and bounds. She is always ready to help, listen and share everything that can be shared. She is often called an organizer, although she is not by her profession. She works at "Kosta Trifkovic" Primary School in Novi Sad, and she teaches Serbian language. She has tried out various professional fields working as a TV journalist and as a lector in an editorial board of a magazine. She has also taken part in the organisation of various cultural manifestations (concerts, themed literary evenings, guest appearances, festivals). She is pleased with the fact that thanks to the Erasmus + project "Living Books in Schools" she will, together with her colleagues, develop some new ideas changing the boundaries of the notion "book" and what it really represents.
