

Snežana Rodić is a school psychologist and has been a deputy principal for two years now. Both of these roles carry with them a large number of different activities and I am expected to listen, understand, solve and respond as quickly as possible to all possible and sometimes impossible questions. Although this is not always easy, I still manage to find new challenges in my work which gives me professional fulfillment. Research and discovery, persistence and cooperation help me to be "one step ahead" of others. I see the project Living Books in Schools as a new, interesting experience that will enrich our work with students and contribute to making all students in the school feel accepted and welcome.
